Exchange Coffee-House, at Havana.

JAMES BRISS, the director of this important mercantile establishment in the great commercial town of the Havana, takes this method of informing the Supercargoes, Masters of vessels, and all other persons trading to the above port, that he has opened on the 5th February 1819, under the protection of Royal Tribunal Consulado, and the approbation of his own government, "The New and Elegant Exchange House," on a plan that would do honor to any of the large sea towns of the United States of America. It is intended for the acommodation of merchants, natives, and foreigners, and likewise for captains of vessels and strangers, arriving every day in commercial and agricultural pursuits.—The house is situated in an airy part of the town, No. 7, Calle del Obispo, opposite the southern wing of the Governors' Palace. The building is commodious, having four large rooms elegantly furnished: besides that of the sub-cribers there is one for the use of non-residents. They will find American, English and French newspapers, price currents, pamphlets, charts, and maps—lists of vessels arrived, those about to sail, and the time of their clearances, and other interesting matter for the commercial world. The proprietor therefore will be extremely happy to see masters of vessels, supercargoes, and passengers soon after their arrival.

In order to render this infant establishment more useful and interesting, the proprietor begs leave to request them to procure several newspapers of the places of their departure—and to report the news they may get on their passages; and at the same time requests them to call one hour before their departure sailing from the above port to procure the shipping list, price current, or other news of commercial nature, which the said James Briss, will be happy to furnish them with.

It is well to observe that there is a bar room for refreshments, but not billiard tables, or any other kind of amusements are allowed.

To the Public.

AN unusual sensibility has been excited in the minds of our countrymen by the copper plate engraving of the Declaration of Independence recently published, accompanied by fac similes of the signatures of those illustrious patriots who framed the document by which our independence was announced to the world. We feel, while we dwell on those signatures, as if we were ushered into the immediate presence of characters so exalted, and we seem for a time to participate in all the emotion which they felt on the approach of so awful a crisis—Hostile armies, desolate fields, towns and cities in conflagration—carnage and death in its most frightful forms apeared in prophetic vision on the one hand, and more than all, the complicated horrors, ignominy and slavery were presented for their acceptance on the other; they deliberated, they paused, they trembled, and at last solemnly appealing to the God of battles, they resolved that the United States were and ought to be free, sovereign and independent. These illustrious patriots, with five solitary exceptions, have now mingled with the common mould—they survive only in their country's glory and in the recollection of a grateful people. But it would be consoling to the present generation, separated as they now are from those patriots, by the intervention of the tomb, to become more intimately acquainted with their revolutionary benefactors. We love to dwell on the features of such men, snatched by the pencil from the oblivion of the grave, and emulate the prominent feats of their biography. Impressed with these ideas, the subscriber proposes, if suitable encouragement is given, to publish the lives of those patriots in numbers, until the whole is completed. The work will be executed in a style not inferior to any European productions, and the portraits by masters of acknowledged merit. The biography will be written by Paul Allen, esq. whose intimacy with the several signers, whose familiarity with the privations and hardships they had to undergo, and whose well known talents will be sufficient to ensure the patronage of an enlightened people. In the execution of this work, all that the publisher dares to promise is, that he will endeavor to deserve the confidence of his countrymen, and that no exertion on his part will be wanting to prevent an abuse of that confidence. He ventures to solicit the assistance of those gentlemen in possession of authentic facts and anecdotes, by communicating the intelligence that will serve to illustrate the characters and to enrich the biography of those founders of the American Republic.—Those who are in possession of their portraits would enlarge the obligation by a loan of the same.

A prospectus with the terms will be given in a few days.

TUESDAY, MARCH 16, 1819.

The Editor thinks that he does no more than his duty to the public, and justice to that respectable gentleman who manages the Theatre, by giving publicity to the following extract of a letter, written to him by a friend now in Washington.

"Washington, March 13, 1819.

"Dear Snowden,

"Now that I am writing, I cannot refrain from saying a few words to you, on the subject of the lady and gentleman who have for four evenings astonished and delighted the people in this city and Georgetown, by their performances on the boards of this theatre, and who are to appear in yours the ensuing week.

"Mrs. Bartley's reputation, as an actress, has for some years been understood, not only from the report of several of our fellow citizens, who had visited London, but from the best critical works published in the metropolis on dramatic subjects.—Miss Smith, (that was her maiden name) was, from the very first night of her appearance in England, considered as worthy of being put in competition with Mrs Siddons, and that too in Mrs. Siddons's first characters; in which, by the way, that great woman was at the time thought not only never to have been excelled, but never likely to be rivalled. Of all Mrs. Siddons's characters, there was not one in which she was deemed so entirely out of the reach of competition, as that of Lady Macbeth, in which she stood not only unequalled, but alone. The last thing that an amateur could have thought of, would be to see any lady stepping forward a candidate for public applause in that extraordinary production of the genius of Shakspeare, genius, while the remembrance of Mrs. Siddons's performance was yet fresh and lively in the public mind—nay, while she herself was on the spot. When the intended appearance of Miss Smith, therefore, was announced in the public prints, the intrepidity of the attempt struck every one forcibly;—the impressions it made were various, according to the humors or dispositions of the many who contemplated it;—the more sour and malignant regarding it as an act of presumption which deserved, and, they foreboded, would meet signal punishment from public criticism—a tribunal from which there is no appeal; and the more generous ascribing the grandeur of the undertaking to a genius rendered confident by a consciousness of its own vigor and superiority. It had the effect, however, of exciting unusual curiosity, mixed, in some, with anxious concern for the event—the most sanguine, however, expecting nothing more than a bare acquittal without censure, with a reasonable promise of better success in a subsequent attempt, when having taken a more accurate measure of circumstances the young lady should descend to a character of less difficulty.—Nor were the forebodings of the malicious diminished, or the hopes of the generous enlivened, when, on her first entrance, they perceived that the debutante was greatly outfigured in person by the unequalled dignity and majestic stature of the great tragic actress. Hitherto, therefore, every thing that could excite prepossessions were against her; and she was left entirely dependent upon the exertion of her intellectual powers.—These, however, soon removed all unfavorable anticipations, and levelled all inequalities; and the towering height, and majestic deportment of Mrs. Siddons were, for the time, forgotten in the transport with which the sterling weight of Miss Smith's speaking, the brilliant, yet just conception of her author's meaning—and the characteristic force and energy of her action inspired every auditor. When the curtain fell, but one opinion pervaded in the theatre, which has never since been impaired in Great Britain—and that was that maugre the advantages which Mrs. Siddons derived in Lady Macbeth from her grand personal appearance, which stood, perhaps, without a parallel in the world—Miss Smith's performance, young though she was, was, on the whole, not inferior to it. These facts I can show you in the Monthly Mirror and other publications of that day, and in copies from them, in publications of our own. No one more loudly joined in the general panegyric than Mrs. Siddons herself.

In one respect she excels the lady I have mentioned—she shines in some parts of comedy, and is more universal in her talents for tragedy—I have seen her thrice, and I do not think that report has said a word too much in her favor. Exclusive of her decided positive superiority to all we have seen in this country, there is a negative excellence she possesses to an extent that will astonish those who have seen many plays, I have seldom seen an actor or actress in my life who did not sometimes offend the eye, the ear, or the understanding—she never does.—Her speaking may be set up as a model of pure, strict correctness—without harshness—without affectation—and almost without sing song—even though the Kembles seem to have been her general model. Nothing in her delivery jars upon or hurts the mind—her readings mark the most luminous discrimination,—and some of her passages she sends home, with not less effect, though more delicacy, than Cooke. In a word, I cannot describe her powers of elocution more justly than in the lines which Churchill applied to Quin—

"His words bore sterling weight—nervous and strong,
In manly tides of sense they roll'd along."

In fact, every word she utters proclaims her a woman of sense—every action, one of the most graceful, skilful, natural and accomplished of actresses.

The expression of her countenance is strong and varied, without effort, at her will, on every demand of the internal passions she is to be supposed to feel. I doubt whether, except by Garrick, in all, and in one or two of the passions, by Cooke, there ever was such a display of the workings of the feelings in the human physiognomy, as was exhibited by Mrs Bartley, the other night, in her recital of Collins' Ode on the Passions.—But you will see,—and our townspeople of Alexandria, will, for once, enjoy the performance of one unexceptionable tragic actress.

And now give me leave to tell you that her husband also is a most excellent performer, who, with merit enough to counterbalance a thousand faults, has scarcely a fault, that I have discovered, to be counterbalanced. He is excellent in tragedy, admirable, delightful and exhilirating in comedy. His and his wife's Mr. and Mrs. Oakley are chef d' oeuvre's in acting—and in Abednego, (Jew,) he comes nearer than any man I have seen to revive in my mind the recollection of some of those whimsical transitions with which, in former times, I used to be delighted by Sam. Foote—but with a thousand times more of nature—and, (which was not the case with Sam.) nothing to excite disapprobation and disgust—nothing to make one, as Foote often did, "wonder at ourselves, and curse our mirth."

I cannot conclude without expressing my hope that Alexandria will do itself the credit to support its reputation for liberality and taste upon this occasion, and that its people manifest at once their judgment, their hospitality, and their justice, by a reception worthy of themselves, and this very extraordinary, meritorious couple.

REVIEW

Of considerations of the principal events of the French revolution; posthumous work of the Baroness de Stael, edited by the Duke de Broglie and the Baron de Stael. Translated from the original manuscript, 2 vols. 8vo.

No 1.

It was the wish of Anacreon, that the wine and the garlands which he expected to be showered on his tomb might be afforded to his person, and that contemporary applause might anticipate the tribute which posterity would offer to his memory. Other estimators of renown, more judicious than the Teian bard, have willingly endured mortification and neglect during life, under the hope that their merits would be eagerly acknowledged by after ages. In countries where literature is influenced by fashion, the instances are few of writers, popular in their day, whose reputation has been strengthened by time. The same decorations of style, the same refinements of tho't which gratify in one stage of society, become disgustful in another: and he that suffers his genius to be the ready vehicle of conventional affections and prejudices, must forfeit those lasting, though protracted horrors, which remunerate the toils of independent minds. It may be added, that tho' an author should disdain this intellectual prostitution, yet, if he select for the exercise of his talents topics of merely local or temporary interest, the influence of his writings seldom transcends the occasion which produced them. The political poems of Dryden, no longer carry terror into the recesses of a cabal;—many comedies of Moliere, after doing their office of the hour, have been dismissed from the tea-table, and even regarded as encumbrances on the shelf.

From the forgetfulness which often shrouds the most ingenious productions, some favorites of Minerva are exempted, enabled by the elasticity of their mental constitutions to please the reigning mode, they possess graver qualities on which to rely for posthumous celebrity. Among these no writer of her time held so elevated a rank as the Baroness de Stael. Educated under the able guidance of her parents, M. Necker and Susan Curchod, the lady who won the youthful love of Gibbon, she underwent a mental discipline, singularly conducive to those habits of comparison and that lucid arrangement which characterize her works. The disposition to study, thus generated, was fostered by the society which frequented the house of Necker, while he administered the French finances. Intercourse with the Parisian literati, doubtless, quickened the powers of their aspiring pupil, but, like Aristotle, she soon surpassed her teachers. The general expectation created by the early developement of her faculties was realized by many memorable publications, of which the most important was her 'influence of literature on society.' In this curious specimen of historical philosophy, she enforces the doctrine of perfectability, ascribing the various retrocessions of the human mind in different nations, to some vicious peculiarities in their government or manners. From the reasonings on this principle, the Corollary is naturally inferred, that religion and morals are so implicated with the state of literature as to require an affectionate regard to its interests from all orders in a state. The useful service rendered to mankind by this performance, was almost forgotten in wonder, when, on her return from Italy, Madame de Stael added new allurement to that country by personifying it in her brilliant Corinna. If the graphical delineations of scenery and of art, endeared this novel to the lovers of nature and of antiquities, the philosopher was not less delighted by the correctness and comprehension of its speculations—the orator by its eloquent addresses to the heart—nor the poet by its fanciful extacies of passion. Perhaps, however the most durable monument of mental perspicacity and strength which Madame de Stael has erected, is her work on Germany. It certainly presents an exacter national portrait, than is elsewhere to be found. Previously to its appearance, the authors of England and France, had so engrossed the regards of the rest of Europe, that the efforts of German genius were comparatively unknown. To instruct this ignorance was the good fortune of Madame de Stael. Disdaining to be the minister of national prejudice, she called the authors of Germany to her judgment seat—not to say that those of France were unrivalled, but to pass a just and candid decision on their merits. At the motion of the same hand, which encircled SCHILLER's brow with a fresh garland, the darkness which had veiled the abilities of Hart, disappeared, and that philosophy was displayed to the world as "one whom it should delight to honor." The numerous other performances of Madame de Stael, which preceded the last mentioned, and to which the limits of this article deny any particular allusion, were marked by a union of judgment and imagination, to be found in no other writer since the days of Johnson.

But her bright career was at length terminated by death, and the work of which we are now to speak was precluded from the benefit of her ultimate revisal. Published under the authority of her children, and illustrating a momentous period of history, it must be received with all the respect which the authenticity of a publication and the importance of a subject can claim. Beside this title to general regard, it possesses a more interresting one to the admirers of its authoress, in the affecting circumstances which surround it. Scarcely has the sigh of friendship been breathed on the grave of Corinna;—scarcely has envy dropped on it a repentant tear, before is heard from it the same strain of prophetic wisdom and creative fancy in which her living oracles had flowed. Destined to instruct this world when her spirit is removed to the other, she now recalls it from the saddening contemplation of her own mortality, to review the mortality of dynasties and empires. The French revolution has often employed the energies of able writers, but the inevitable prejudice against contemporary interest and feeling has made their efforts suspicious. To the Parisian pamphlets of the day, no foreigner who sought correct information pretended to resort, and views but little less partial were presented by the English politicians. The situation of their own country imparted to them an interest in the French Revolution, inferior to that only which was felt by the parties whom it immediately affected, and by no means favorable to a candid or even an intelligible exposition of its events. The rival abilities of Burke and Mackintosh, indeed met in a contest which illustrated the ornament, the dexterity and the vigor of their minds, but of which the future purpose will be rather to instruct the intellectual combatant in the dicipline of controversy, than to provide the candid inquirer with arguments of conviction. Now when the phrenzy of ambition and of suffering has passed away; when time begins to divest the pageants of the hour of their deceitful vestments; the virtues, the crimes, and the calamities of France seek immortal memoirs in the record of a writer, to whom correct information was accessible, and from whose probity all fairness may be expected.

Of the causes of the revolution, Madame de Stael has given a theory not very discordant with that generally received; though she has certainly exhibited its circumstances with peculiar clearness. The observations on the origin of the European kingdoms, which introduce the work, are followed by a retrospect of French history before the reign of Louis XVI. At this period, the murmur of discontent, which for many years had been faintly suspired, became audible, and despotism grew intolerable to the witnessers of American liberty.

In the second year of Louis XVI. Turgot was driven from the cabinet, to which he had endeavored to communicate the spirit of the œconomists. This able statesman was succeeded by M. de Taboureau, whose inadequacy to the situation soon produced his dismission and the appointment of M. Necker. The financial schemes which he suggested were skillfully adopted, according to M. de Stael, to the exigencies of the occasion, and tended to procure for the government a credit which the incapacity and profusion of precedent ministers had long withheld from it. The distinctions between the different departments of administration never having been declined in France; Necker found himself invited not only to regulate the fiscal concerns of the nation, but to heal its political diseases.

Perceiving that the time had gone by, when a military and splendid court could reconcile the French to tyranny, and that their desire for a free constitution was too loudly expressed to be unheard, and too universal to be despised, he labored during his first ministry, that the king should offer to the nation, what the nation would otherwise demand. The influence of this wise and liberal system on the mind of Louis, was resisted by the courteous and especially the second rate nobles who having been recently inducted into the honors of rank, were unwilling their former equals should, by recovering their rights, cease to be reminded of their present inferiority. In this disapprobation of the minister's views, most of the courtiers, from causes peculiar to each, sympathised. The jealousy of power led M. Maurepas, to enlist against him venal scribblers, whose repeated, tho' unbelieved calumnies, deeply wounded his sensibility. Madame Necker, aware how morbid was this quality in her husband, incautiously wrote a secret letter to De Maurepas, requesting him to suppress such offensive publications. This measure, it will be readily supposed, only enlightened his malignity, by revealing the vulnerable point in Necker's character. The libels were renewed—the king was silent—and the minister resigned.

LATEST FROM ENGLAND.

Extracts from English papers, received at the office of the Norfolk Herald, per ship Virginia, as noticed in our last.

Liverpool, January 27.

It is understood that the coronation of his Majesty, the King of France is fixed for the 3d of May, a day rendered ever memorable in the annals of that country by the return of the King in 1814.

A private letter from Paris affirms, that before the end of the present month, the French Ministers will submit to the legislature a law upon the Liberty of the Press; and another upon the Organization of the Municipalities. The law upon the press, it is presumed, will render complete liberty to the public journals from and after the 1st of Jan. 1820. According to the proposed law on the municipalities, the departmental councils, the councils of arrondissement, and those of the communes, are to be elective bodies: the Mayors are to be named by the king.

No public business of any importance has been transacted in either of the French Chambers. The funds have maintained a steady price at about 68f.

A Flander's mail arrived this morning, with papers from Brussels to the 21st inst. The preliminary proceedings in the charge brought against several persons accused of a plot, tending to place on the throne of France, the son of Napoleon, and to give the regency to her majesty the Empress Maria Louisia, are terminated: two of them are to be set at liberty, the others are to be tried.

January 25.

Yesterday we received the papers to the 22d inst. the contents of which are not important. The Chamber of Deputies have been engaged only in discussing some arrangements respecting the mode of receiving petitions, not in appointing a deputation to attend the expiatory service, which was performed at St. Denis on Thursday last, for the late king of France.

SPAIN.

Irun, Jan. 3.

The Couriers between Madrid and Cadiz are escorted by strong detachments of cavalry, posted at different distances in La Manche, and on the route across La Sierra-Morena. Travellers proceeding to or arriving from Andalusia are compelled to unite in caravans in the difficult passages; these caravans are escorted by small detachments of cavalry. The armed bands have retired into the passes of the mountains, and seldom come out: however, one of their bands had the audacity to advance as far as the Canton of Val de Pegnas.

Irun Jan. 7.

The King is so affected by the death of the Queen, that for several days his grief would not allow him to attend to any public business.

It is to Casa del Campo, situated half a league from Madrid, that he daily goes to indulge in his affliction with some persons who are attached to him. It is said that his Majesty has resolved no more to reside in the palace of the Escurial, as the kings of Spain have from time immemorial been accustomed to do because the remains of his beloved consort are deposited in the pantheon of the Church of St. Lawrence, the place of sepulture for the royal family.

It is affirmed here that the courier from Cadiz to Madrid, with the escort, has been seized near the Sierra Morena, by one of the bands of armed men who infest the defiles of those mountains.

Vienna Jan. 11.

The last accounts from Constantinople, of the 10th of December, contain the following statement. "On the intervention of Russia and Prussia, the Porte has at length recognized the king of the Netherlands. The new Hospodar of Wallachia, Alexander Suzzo, intended to go to Bucharest about the end of last month. The Aga of the Janisaries, lately appointed, has been again deposed by the Grand Seignor; his Lieutenant was appointed in his place. The Porte is incessantly occupied with the increase of its navy. A few days before these accounts came away, a ship of the line, of 84 guns, was launched, and a small vessel of 18 guns."

We are authorised to state that Cuthbert Powel, Esq. declines being considered a Candidate for the Senate for the next election.

We are authorised to announce William H. Fitzhugh Esq. of Fairfax, as a Candidate for the next Senatorial district, composed at the next election, of the counties of Loudoun, Fairfax, and Fauquir.

Gunston for Sale.

THIS elegant estate is situated on the Potomac, 16 miles below Alexandria—it is bounded on three sides by the Potomac and Pohick creek, and contains nearly 3,000 acres of land, level and fertile, to which are attached six shad and herring fisheries, two of which command the river channel. This land will be laid off in four tracts, so as to have one or more fisheries to each; these tracts will be again divided if requisite. This estate is level and beautifully situated, very fertile, and remarkably healthy. Plaister acts with an effect equal to that of any part of Virginia or Pennsylvania.—I have used 500 bushels in twelve months, and such is its beneficial operation, that were I to keep this land I should considerably increase the quantity. A manufacturing mill is distant about two miles on a stream navigable for vessels carrying 1200 bushels of wheat, where the Baltimore and Dist. of Columbia prices are given for grain: being bounded on 3 sides by water, a small extent only of fence is necessary to inclose the whole: it would be admirably adapted to grazing. The improvements are a large and very substantial brick mansion, 40 by 70 feet, with every necessary outhouse, three commodious barns, houses for Negroes, and fish houses at each of the fisheries. 120,000 bricks and 1000 bushels of lime are just burnt on the premises. There is a considerable extent of live fence, both useful and ornamental, two orchards of well selected apples and peach, besides an abundance of other choice fruit. More than 150 acres are in clover, 200 in corn, and land is in preparation for sowing 250 bushels of small grain. Any quantity of hay can be cut from the low grounds, some of which (and all might,) have been reclaimed at a trifling expense. The river and creeks, abound with wild fowl, particularly canvass backs, the woods with deer and a variety of other game. Mules, cattle, highly improved sheep, farming utensils and household furniture can be had. The terms of sale will be accommodating. Property in any of the cities, negroes, bank stock, western lands, or lands near the Ridge, will be taken in payment.—Letters must be addressed to me at Pohick Church, Fairfax county, Virginia.

September 4 GEORGE MASON.

Valuable Property for Sale.

THE subscriber is desirious of selling a handsomely situated farm, on Hunting creek, in Fairfax county Virginia, adjoining the Mount Vernon estate and the lands of general Thomson Mason, four miles from Alexandria, containing about 240 acres, 80 of which are in wood—40 to 50 in thriving meadow of clover and timothy—a part of the residue recently seeded with wheat and rye, and clover, last spring—the whole enclosed with a new post and rail fence.—The improvements are, a comfortable and convenient frame dwelling house and kitchen, smoke house, poultry house, granary and stables.—There is on this place a rich and productive garden, and a large body of marsh meadow, from which may be saved annually 100 tons of hay, nearly as nutricious as the timothy or clover.—With the farm will be sold a number of very valuable [illegible], cows and sheep; waggon, carts, and a variety of farming utensils and household and kitchen furniture; corn, oats and rye, and 40 tons hay. Also, adjoining the one above described, a farm containing 160 acres, recently enclosed, on which is a brick house, which a trifling expense would render comfortable. The soil is excellent, and a considerable part might be easily converted into meadow.—it would be sold with the other or separately. Also, a number of valuable servants, male and female. To prevent unnecessary application, he would observe, that they will only be sold to persons residing in the District or its vicinity, and not to be carried from it. The subscriber will also sell the greater part of his household furniture, which is new and handsome. For terms of all or any part of the above property, apply to NOBLET HERBERT, esq. or

PROPOSALS

BY JOSEPH M. SANDERSON,
for publishing by subscription,
A BIOGRAPHY OF THE SIGNERS
TO THE
Declaration of Independence,
ACCOMPANIED WITH PLATES:

To which will be annexed a history of the proceedings of congress during the passage of the law, and the Declaration itself, with fac-simile engravings of the signatures.

By PAUL ALLEN, Esq.

TO THE PUBLIC.

IT seems a little surprising that amongst so many subjects as have been presented for American Biography, the lives of those who have affixed their signatures to the Declaration of Independence have been overlooked or disregarded. The eyes of thousands have dwelt with rapture upon the document that announced to the world that "these United Colonies were, and of right ought to be, free, sovereign, and independent states;" while we are better acquainted with the handwriting than with the characters of many of those illustrious men who have added their signatures to that instrument. The founders of the only remaining republic on the globe, have, with a few splendid exceptions, gone to their graves, and it behoves a generous posterity, sensible of their obligations, to preserve their fame. The longer we neglect the payment of so sacred a debt, the more difficult does the payment become.—Traits of individual character are fugitive and evanescent; and if they are not snatched by the hand of the Biographic Muse, at an early season, from the cold grasp of death, will soon partake of the oblivion of the body.—It is not the object of the present attempt to deal in that profusion of indiscriminate and unsparing panegyric, so often and so falsely dignified with the name of Biography: we wish to represent the characters as they were; they stand in need of no panegyric; and we earnestly solicit from the surviving relations and friends of those revolutionary patriots all the information that will tend to a developement of character. Man is the creature of circumstance, and we wish to show the progress of those patriots from their first resistance of colonial aggression, until they stood forth the noble and undaunted champions of their country's independence. All this can only be done by a familiar acquaintance with the lives of these men, and whoever of the surviving friends or relatives will furnish facts and circumstances in their possession to unfold and illustrate their characters, shall be entitled to a copy of the work as a recompense. It is contemplated, wherever it is practicable, further to embellish the meditated work with correct likenesses of the subjects of our biography, executed by the most eminent artists in the country. For this purpose we again solicit the assistance of their surviving relatives and friends. If they will transmit to the publisher any engraving or portrait from which a copy may be taken, the original shall be faithfully returned, and shall likewise be remunerated with a copy of the work. In the first number it is proposed to give an account of the Declaration of Independence, from the first motion that was made on the floor of congress until its final passage into a law, a period embracing much curious and secret history: finally, we promise to add to our last number the Declaration of Independence itself, with fac-simile engravings of the signatures. We have now compendiously stated the objects of our present undertaking, and we hope that it will be unnecessary to mention that no exertions on our part shall be spared.

The public are now in possession of our project, which does indeed seem to be demanded, by the avidity so recently displayed for the possession of the Declaration of Independence, since it is of very little import to become acquainted with a man's hand writing without a previous knowledge of the man. The secret history of our Declaration of Independence, the lives of those who have affixed their signatures to that instrument, accompanied by their likenesses, and finally the Declaration itself with fac-similes of the signatures, will bring into one compact view the prominent facts of that interesting crisis.

CONDITIONS.

I. The work will be published in numbers, or half volumes, of 150 pages octavo, and will be contained in ten numbers.

II. It will be printed on fine paper made expressly for the purpose, and delivered to subscribers at two dollars and fifty cents per half volume or number, payable on delivery.

☞ Subscriptions will be received at the office of the Alexandria Gazette.
